ABORIGINAL HERITAGE OFFICE, MUSEUM & KEEPING PLACE

- Would you recognise an Aboriginal heritage site if you were walking in the bush?
- Why are they special and why is it important to protect them?
- How did Aboriginal people make weapons and tools?
- How did they fish in the harbour?

Come and visit the Aboriginal Heritage Office
to find out the answers to these questions and others!

THE ABORIGINAL HERITAGE OFFICE

The Aboriginal Heritage Office (along with the six Councils of Lane Cove, Ku-ring-gai, Northern Beaches, North Sydney, Strathfield and Willoughby) are in a joint venture striving to (re)locate, protect and conserve Aboriginal heritage sites whilst creating an understanding of our local Aboriginal heritage through information and education.

Located at Freshwater, the Aboriginal Heritage Office is a museum/keeping place containing cultural and historical artefacts where you can see some of the objects used in every day life by Aboriginal people.

- Learn about northern Sydney's Aboriginal heritage which is thousands of years old. You will be surprised at what has survived.

- Watch our dioramas in action.

- Talk to our Aboriginal Heritage Officers, Archaeologists, and other friendly staff about Aboriginal history, artefacts, rock engravings, shell middens, axe grinding grooves, and more.

- See historical artefacts and find out how and why they were used.

The Aboriginal Heritage Office conducts talks, guided bush walks and activities for schools and other local community groups.
